About Rae

Rae is a true leader in using creative expression to nurture self-worth, resilience, healing, and social change.

For over fifteen years she has helped individuals and teams discover their passion, purpose and authentic power to become confident and effective thought leaders and creative problem solvers. Rae, a community activist for over 40 years, passionately focuses her lens on improving the lives of women and children whether speaking to congressional leaders about the Runaway and Homeless Youth Trafficking Prevention Act or sharing her personal story of healing from childhood sexual abuse. Rae believes when we share our stories of courage and resilience, people know they are not alone which creates a positive ripple of hope. She is the author of Art From My Heart and the Benjamin Franklin award winning inspirational book, The Creative Activist: Make the World Better, One Person, One Action at a Time. Her mission is to engage, educate and empower one million creative activists around the globe.

Rae has been a featured guest on many programs such as:
